The Investor's Guide to United States Coins Jul 25 2020 A bible for coin investment in the 21st century. Twenty years ago, the first edition of this book was revolutionary in its approach to the buying and selling of rare coins. Collectors and investors were told that if they followed empirical models of price performance and investment return, not only would they profit handsomely, but their coin purchases would also outperform traditional investment vehicles. For this new edition, the well-known professional numismatist Silvano DiGenova and Dr. Jason Perry, Financial Economist at the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, have joined the book's original author, Neil S. Berman to fully update the contents, taking into account the steady acceleration in rare coin prices, changes in trading practices, the revolution in grading standards, and external factors affecting the buying and selling of coins. The result is a no-holds-barred look at today's evolving market that is indispensable to experienced collectors and investors as well as neophytes. Included is an extensive price history of all United States coins from 1955 to date, with notable auction results and listings of key dates. The numerous charts of data and illustrative graphs interspersed throughout will be useful to dealers and collectors alike in forming strategies to take advantage of what will be one of the great growth areas of the 21st century.

Local Image Patterns for Counterfeit Coin Detection and Automatic Coin Grading Sep 07 2021

Abstract Local Image Patterns for Counterfeit Coin Detection and Automatic Coin Grading Coins are an essential part of our life, and we still use them for everyday transactions. We have always faced the issue of the counterfeiting of the coins, but it has become worse with time due to the innovation in the technology of counterfeiting, making it more difficult for detection. Through this thesis, we propose a counterfeit coin detection method that is robust and applicable to all types of coins, whether they have letters on them or just images or both of these characteristics. We use two different types of feature extraction methods. The first one is SIFT (Scale Invariant Feature transform) features, and the second one is RFR (Rotation and Flipping invariant Regional Binary Patterns) features to make our system complete in all aspects and very generic at the same time. The feature extraction methods used here are scale, rotation, illumination, and flipping invariant. We concatenate both our feature sets and use them to train our classifiers. Our feature sets highly complement each other in a way that SIFT provides us with most discriminative features that are scale and rotation invariant but do not consider the spatial value when we cluster them, and here our second set of features comes into play as it considers the spatial structure of each coin image. We train SVM classifiers with two different sets of features from each image. The method has an accuracy of 99.61% with both high and low-resolution images. We also took pictures of the coins at 90 ° and 45 ° angles using the mobile phone camera, to check the robustness of our proposed method, and we achieved promising results even with these low-resolution pictures. Also, we work on the problem of Coin Grading, which is another issue in the field of numismatic studies. Our algorithm proposed above is customized according to the coin grading problem and calculates the coin wear and assigns a grade to it. We can use this grade to remove low-quality coins from the system, which are otherwise sold to coin collectors online for a considerable price. Coin grading is currently done by coin experts manually and is a time consuming and expensive process. We use digital images and apply computer vision and machine learning algorithms to calculate the wear on the coin and then assign it a grade based on its quality level. Our method calculates the amount of wear on coins and assign them a label and achieve an accuracy of 98.5%.
